also unique in each individual. During the exploration, the place of being through doing in survival, health, and well-being began to emerge, setting the scene for later consideration about approaches to promote health. The next chapter will explore these ideas still further as occupation and health are considered from the perspective of people reaching out toward what they have the potential to become through what they do.

References